

Travel Expense Policy

1. Purpose and Scope

This Travel Expense Policy establishes guidelines for business travel undertaken on behalf of the organization. The policy is intended to ensure that necessary travel expenses are managed responsibly, consistently, and transparently. Employees should use reasonable judgment when selecting transportation, accommodation, meals, and other business travel services.

2. Travel Authorization

Business travel should normally be approved before bookings are made. Employees should provide the business purpose, destination, expected dates, and estimated cost through the designated approval process. Travel that has not received the required authorization may not be eligible for reimbursement unless an appropriate exception is approved.

3. Transportation

Employees should select practical and cost-effective transportation that is appropriate for the business requirement. Air, rail, road transport, taxis, and other services may be reimbursed when they are reasonable and supported by valid documentation. Personal vehicle use, mileage reimbursement, parking, tolls, and local transportation are subject to the limits and procedures applicable to the employee's location.

4. Accommodation and Meals

Employees should select safe and reasonably priced accommodation that meets the business requirement. Reimbursable meal expenses should be reasonable and related to the approved business trip. Where the company provides a per-diem or fixed allowance, employees should follow the applicable allowance rules rather than claiming expenses that are already covered by that allowance.

5. Expense Claims

Employees should submit travel expense claims promptly after completing a trip. Claims should include the business purpose, travel dates, expense categories, and supporting receipts where required. Managers may review expenses for business relevance, reasonableness, policy compliance, and available budget before reimbursement is processed.

6. Exceptions and Compliance

Exceptions to this policy require appropriate authorization and should be documented. Employees must not submit duplicate claims, personal expenses, fabricated receipts, or expenses unrelated to business travel. The organization may revise reimbursement limits and procedures as business needs, tax requirements, or local regulations change.
